By Marguerite Mooers Marshall.

If you desire a domestic wife and a large family of children, don't marry a "double rose," a woman who has flowered intellectually and artistically until she has reached the limit imposed by nature and is nearly or quite unable to reproduce herself.

That is the warning of Dr. Robert T. Morris, a well known New York physician and the author of two most interesting volumes in the To-Morrow's Topics Series-"Microbes and Men" and "A Surgeon's Philosophy." It was because I knew that in these books Dr. Morris has ston of Chicago.

If you feel that your duty to society demands a numerous progeny you are nevertheatitude is still in doubt, though press despatches from Bucharest continue to report active military preparations.

"Nevertheless it is true that in the intellectual, highly cultured woman of to-day the breeding in-stinct is lessened or lost. Often stinct is lessened or lost. Often this type of woman does not marry at all. If she does marry she either remains childless or contents herself with one child. She is what I call the double rose of civilization, for she is developed to a point where Nature gives orders to bacteris to head her off. We must face aquarely this fact—that the logical end of culture always has been and always will be extinction of any one nation, making way for another nation to follow."

"Then you don't blaine the modern woman for the decrease in the num-ber of her children?" I asked. ber of her children? I asked.
"Not at all." declared Dr. Morris.
"She can't help herself. The same law holds true with animals and plants as with human beings. As a result of culture, the white Leghorn hen rises to great heights of genius in this plan of nature. "But it is an obvious fact that at the present stage of our cultural period, in several civilized countries, the sexes are following a declining trend, approaching each other in type. There is a mental and physical level."

The plaything knows how to estract, and is not so sorupulous There is a mental and physical level-ling process. And when the sexes in any one nation approach each other in type, it seems to mean that Nature is about through with playing the game of mutation and evolution with people of that nation. A mean type having been established and tried out. Nature then throws it away and takes up another lot."

But Dr. Morris isn't sending up any Macedonian cry of "Back to the home!" On the contrary he believes in taking Old Lady Nature at her word and conforming the laws of society to it. Since certain women are ap- thing playeth.

Barrennesses.

"There are three types of women in the world to-day. There is the exemplar femining woman, whose truest and deepest heartfelt wish is for a home of her own. She may be called the sturdily reproductive single rose. And there is the divagate feminist, who is to be divided into two varieties, the viragint and the plaything.

"The viragint—who corresponds, among women, to the effeminate among men — approaches the masculine in physical characteristics and a tendency to high development of the intellect. These velopment of the intellect. These women may engage in extremely useful activities; in fact they are likely to be more active, perhaps, than are men in the lesser civic utilities. Very brilliant and clear minds are found among these women in business and in the professions. They do not understand very well what is meant when the subject of motherhood is under discussion, as it is not within the range of their instinctive response.

'If an exemplar feminine woman wishes to marry she need do little more than allow the fact to be known that she desires to have six children. If a divagate feminist woman is delaw holds true with animals and plants as with human beings. As a result of culture, the white Leghern hen rises to great heights of genius in egg-laying, but how many chickens will she hatch if the matter is left to her own choice? Not one! She then, is worthless as an example on take up some occupation that will give her independence. She strives keenly for positions in competition with men and will be likely to wear from the finest strains of horses. Flowers of some species of plants loss their breeding ability altogether when doubling.

The advagate feminist woman is developed to thoughts of great public activity, and of children only incidents shall you Hindenburg's army group of Prince Leopoid—The enemy repeated his fruitiess attacks. "The plaything knows how to attract, and is not so scrupulous in demeanor when attracting as the mother type of woman would be. The instinct of motherhood in the plaything is often lost entirely, and she rarely has more than one or two children. She is a double rose who wants to be always at the flower show."

So now you know. If you want a materfamilias, pick an exemplar feminine. If you want a competent secchoose a viragint. If you are for a siren, go where the play-

"A corporal, who was wounded, said that in many places the German trenches were literally levelled by the pounding of French guns and the German occupants automatically burseled.

We charged across fields that were a chaos of loose mud, kinks of shat terisd barbed wire, shreds of German uniforms, battered headgear, knaping the shock as in continuous ague. We had guns everywhere, and all were firing their hardest at carefully registered points in the German trenches. For every yard of trench four shells fell within five minutes and each shell had a radius of destruction of at least twenty yards.
